NEW YORK, Nov. 13,-War news in ricty says the Tribune's London correspendent. There are details of eight or ten minor actions and skirmishes all the way from Orange river to Lydenberg. The conclusion that may be fairly drawn from this revival of hostilities is that the British army is now thoroughly alert, inured to service, remarkably mobile and more than a match for Boer wiles and stratagems. The Boers are now out-maneuvered and surprised and the British cannot be entrapped, even by De Wet. This much is said in England about the necessity for revolutionizing the war office and transforming the whole system of military training. Too little stress is laid upon the fact that an army of over 200,000 men is now having in South Africa the most strenuous possible training in the
